Following in Ted Bundy's Footsteps

Suspenseful novel about a killer who is faced with a potentially life altering decision in New York City

CALGARY, Alberta – Author Lisa Dewar is proud to announce the publication of her novel Kiss Her, Kill Her (published by AuthorHouse). Dewar tells an exhilarating story about a clean-cut, handsome taxi driver in New York City who soon reveals himself as a serial killer on the prowl for his next prey. Motivated by his mother's fascination with crime and murder, Tarryn Cooper Love has made it his life's mission to seek out the perfect victims in order to reach his goal of surpassing his mother's idol, the infamous Ted Bundy.

He was proud of the fact that the persona he had perfected over the years had allowed him some freedoms that the typical selective killer could not have. He could pick his victims from anyone—some had been the very rich, some were very poor, and others were just your run-of-the-mill, middle-class schlumps. He could dazzle them with his wit, get their guard down with his charm, and ultimately lure them anywhere he wanted. After all, doesn't everyone expect that a killer would have some telltale sign of evil plastered on his face? No one was looking for a well-bred white guy who could pass for a movie star.

When a beautiful woman named Carmen gets into his taxi flashing a wad of cash, Tarryn thinks he's hit the jackpot.

Tarryn got a good look at her as he turned toward the back of the cab and thought better of his first reaction. His back had begun to itch, a sure sign that she was worthy of his special attention. Anytime that he heard a great woman singer, the hair on his neck stood up, and every time that he found a potential playmate, the scars on his back would itch. He didn't consciously will it to happen; it was merely his body, announcing that it was time to add on to his laundry list of victims.

What Tarryn discovers is a suicidal socialite whose twisted tale might rival his own troubled past – and leaves him with a decision that questions his future. The book's narrative takes place in a 24-hour period, and from the very beginning, readers will feel the thrill of discovery as they follow Carmen's life story and determine if Tarryn Cooper Love will meet his goal.
